about me

My name is Delilah and I blog about curly hair and easy ways to switch to green living. I'm a mom, wife, and small business owner living in Orlando, Florida.

I started this blog to help people learn how to embrace their curly hair and find affordable and effective clean products and brands. I also want people to embrace balance - which means I don't participate in fear mongering or absolutes. I encourage my readers to not sweat the small stuff and just do what they can. I tell them to keep things simple and make small changes little by little.

Part of living a more natural lifestyle is embracing my curly hair and following the curly girl method. This is a passion of mine that I love to share and help other women embrace their natural texture. Many are confused about how to properly care for curly hair so I research, test, and share what I can to help others.

I have been using natural and organic products for over 10 years. When I talk to people, their biggest hurdle to making the switch is the cost and concerns about the effectiveness of more natural products. Cost definitely has been a factor for me in the past but as more brands embrace green living more affordable options become available.

If you think we might be a good fit then please keep reading to see how we can work together.
